Marathon musts: No bags, lock your doors, take T

Security. Two years after the terror attack, authorities are taking no chances at the 119th Boston Marathon.

In an open letter to college students ahead of the Boston Marathon on April 20, cops are advising them to leave their bags at home, take the T — and lock their apartments.

That third one has nothing to do with the annual run and everything to do with a spate of recent break-ins.

"Always secure your on- and off-campus housing units when you leave, and lock the doors at all times. A significant number of recently reported house breaks to student housing have been through unlocked windows," the letter reads.

The letter, signed by Police Commissioner William Evans and Superintendent Bernard O'Rourke, also warns there will be an increased number of uniformed and undercover officers along the marathon route.

Cameras, according to police, have been installed along the Boston portion of the route. Observation points will be set up near the finish line in Back Bay to monitor the crowd.

During the marathon two years ago, two bombs went off near the finish line, killing three and injuring at least 260. Last week, Dzhokhar Tsarnaev was found guilty of perpetrating that crime in federal court. His brother Tamerlan was also thought to have been an architect of the bombings, but he was killed during a later shootout with police.

Quoted

"Like all major public events there is always great concern about your safety and the consideration of those who reside in our neighborhoods."

BPD statement

Tsarnaev now faces death if convicted. The sentencing phase of his trial begins the day after the marathon.

This year, spectators are encouraged to leave large items such as backpacks and large handbags at home. Those items aren't banned, but individuals carrying them could be subject to search, police said.

Newbury Street and Huntington Avenue outbound will be closed to traffic to make it easier for pedestrians to move around, police said. Traffic and parking will be prohibited on several streets leading up to the marathon and on Marathon Monday, police said.

All public drinking, open containers and intoxication won't be tolerated, police said. Congregating on rooftops, fire escapes and porches is also prohibited.

Safety first

Marathon Monday:

- Leave bags and large items at home
- Take the T
- Parking and driving near the marathon route will be a nightmare
- Police say the warm weather attracts crime:
- Lock your doors and secure electronic devices
- Walk with a companion in well-lit areas
- Do not walk and talk on your phone or with headphones

Manhunt. Chelsea man, wanted on warrants, escapes from Mass. General

Police are searching for a 28-year-old Chelsea man who escaped police custody while being treated for injuries at Massachusetts General Hospital early Saturday morning.

Mose Tene was taken to the hospital Friday after he was in a single-car crash on Highland Avenue in Chelsea.

Police later learned that the car Tene was driving was reported stolen and that Tene had outstanding warrants and was not properly licensed.

Around 6 a.m. Saturday, Tene left his hospital room and escaped. Police say Tene doesn't pose a threat to the public. Still, authorities are warning that if spotted, he should not be approached and police should be called immediately. METRO

T fines commuter operator $1.6M for subpar service

The MBTA has fined Keolis — the operator of the commuter rail — $1.6 million for less than stellar service in January and February, reports The Boston Globe.

Commuter frustration was palpable during those months as consistent delays and cancellations frustrated riders during a historically harsh winter season. More than 8 feet of snow was dumped on Boston in a little more than a month.

Keolis was fined for dirty and late trains, among other problems. Keolis didn't respond to requests for comment, according to The Globe. However, in early March, Keolis General Manager Gerald Francis issued an apology to commuters for subpar service via a full-page ad that ran in Metro and The Globe. GLOBE

MBTA: Man wanted for South Station B&E

Transit police are looking for a man they say broke into a basement office at South Station and stole cash from a safe.

The theft is alleged to have occurred just before midnight on March 16. After taking his loot, the suspect fled in a cab to Decatur Street in Charlestown. Police did not specify how much cash was taken or how the alleged thief accessed the safe.

The suspect is described as a white man, between 40 and 45, about 5-foot-6 to 5-foot-8 in height and thin. At the time of the theft he was wearing a green hooded sweatshirt, blue Red Sox cap and blue jeans.

Anyone with any information can call Transit Police at 617-222-1050 or text an anonymous tip to 873873. DANNY MCDONALD

Boston police. Officer shot in the face after traffic stop is home

John T. Moynihan / PROVIDED

The Boston police officer who was shot in the face at point-blank range last month has returned home from the hospital.

Police say Officer John Moynihan was shot by Angelo West, 41, during a traffic stop in Roxbury on March 27. Police are now describing this officer's condition as serious but improving. Following the shooting, Moynihan, a decorated policeman and veteran of the Iraq War, underwent several hours of surgery. The doctors removed a bullet from his neck.

In a blog post, Boston Police said "John and his family have been strengthened, humbled and inspired by the outpouring of love and support they've received — not only from his closest friends and fellow officers — but also from concerned citizens and strangers from all over the country wishing him a full and speedy recovery."

Moynihan thanked the medical teams at Boston Medical Center and Spaulding Rehabilitation Hospital, through the blog. He also thanked the officers on the scene of the shooting for their "lightning-quick reaction and response that he credits for saving his life."

West, the alleged shooter, was shot dead in the shootout with police that ensued after he shot Moynihan.

On Friday, Suffolk County District Attorney Daniel Conley released surveillance video of the shooting. It shows Moynihan and two colleagues approaching a car during a traffic stop. West jumps out of the vehicle, shoots Moynihan in the face and then runs out of the camera frame as Moynihan falls to the ground.

Authorities say West had a criminal record including prior gun charges.

Clinton announces White House bid

Democrat. This will be the second presidential campaign for Hillary Clinton.

Hillary Clinton cast herself as a champion for everyday Americans on Sunday, kicking off her long-awaited second run for the White House with a vow to fight for a level playing field for those recovering from tough economic times.

Clinton, who begins the 2016 presidential race as a commanding Democratic frontrunner, entered the fray with a video announcement in which she said the economic deck was still stacked for those at the top.

"Everyday Americans need a champion, and I want to be that champion," she said in the video, which was posted on her new website on Sunday afternoon. "So you can do more than just get by, you can get ahead. And stay ahead."

Clinton, who lost a bruising Democratic nominating battle to Barack Obama in 2008, said in a tweet that she would be traveling to Iowa, the state that holds the kickoff contest in the parties' nominating process in early 2016.

Clinton's campaign will emphasize her plans to address economic inequality and will tout the historic nature of her effort to become the first woman U.S. president, aides said.

One of the biggest challenges for a woman who has been one of the most famous figures in the United States since the early 1990s, will be to show a more down-to-earth side while connecting with ordinary voters.

Critics, including liberals in her own party, say she has grown out of touch after decades as the wife of former President Bill Clinton, a senator and secretary of state. REUTERS

Bomb attacks in Egypt kill 13

Two separate bomb attacks targeting security forces in Egypt's Sinai peninsula killed at least 13 people and wounded dozens on Sunday, the latest in a wave of violence in a region hit by an Islamist insurgency.

Egypt's military said a roadside bomb detonated by militants killed six soldiers and wounded two others in an attack on an armored military vehicle in the town of Sheikh Zuweid.

Two of those killed were officers, it said.

The army said in a statement that "terrorist and extremist elements" were behind the blast and that two of those killed were officers.

Later Sunday, a car bomb targeting a police station in al-Arish, the capital of the North Sinai governorate, killed at least seven people and wounded 44, medical sources said. REUTERS

The Timber-baby has cometh

Glad tidings to the Biel-Timberlake household, as Jessica Biel gave birth to her and husband Justin Timberlake's first baby — a boy — late last week, according to People magazine. The new parents are "ecstatic" about the new arrival, named Silas Randall Timberlake — which, as celebrity baby names go, is pretty damn reasonable. The couple reportedly kept the sex of the baby a surprise until the actual arrival, which is adorable but must've made shopping for baby shower gifts a nightmare. Last we heard from Timberlake was at the iHeartRadio Music Awards on March 29, when he offered a message straight to Biel from the stage: "I can't wait to see our greatest creation yet," he said while accepting the Innovator Award. "Daddy's heading home right now to innovate by learning how to change a poopy diaper and get my swaddle on."

Justin Bieber has a warrant in Argentina

Try as he might to mount a full-on character rehabilitation tour, Justin Bieber's messy past just won't leave him alone. For instance, there's now a warrant out for his arrest in Argentina, with a judge in Buenos Aires ordering that the Canadian pop terror be locked up should he ever step foot in the country again. The order stems from a 2013 incident during which Bieber and one of his bodyguards allegedly attacked a photographer while the "Baby" singer was leaving a nightclub. "I consider it pertinent to order the immediate detention of the accused," Judge Alberto Julio Banos wrote in the April 8 ruling. Another judge had ordered Bieber to appear for questioning about the incident back in November, but it looks like he didn't get the message. So I'm losing count, how many countries is Bieber not allowed back in anymore at this point?

Even Argentina has its limits.

Blake Lively's baby does not have three godmothers

So that story about how Blake Lively had named all three of her "Sisterhood of the Traveling Pants" co-stars — America Ferrara, Alexis Bledel and Amber Tamblyn — as godmothers for her new daughter, James? Yeah, not so much. "I never named them my godmothers. They're my dear friends. I would say my baby has a lot of fairy godmothers," she clarifies to E! News. (Also worth noting: Fairy godmother-hood is not legally binding. Yet.) "My sister [Robyn] would be the one to take care of my baby" should something happen, Lively clarifies. But what about the pants? Are they still magical? Spill.

A SISTERHOOD HAS ITS LIMITS.

It's 'Game of Thrones' ... for kids!

We wouldn't put it past George R.R. Martin to do something like this in real life: The ever-procrastinating author teams up with "Conan" to make an intro song for a hypothetical "Game of Thrones" cartoon series for kids called "Lil Thrones" — except it's really not for kids at all, of course. Or for people who are behind on the series, because, hello spoilers. Choosing to focus its minute-and-a-half runtime on deaths, dismemberments and general unpleasantness that have befallen the main characters around Westeros, the clip is at least super-catchy. And the animation is adorable.

Don't worry, Jaden Smith's Twitter is still ridiculous

It's been a minute since we've checked in with the Twitter feed of celebrity teen philosopher Jaden Smith, so how about a refresher? When he's not turning heads in a dress, Smith is still keeping the Internet entertained with pontifications, observations and genre Zen meditations, like:

"That moment when peeing feels so good you start crying."

Or...

"Instagram is not the answer."

Or even:

"Bill Benson's findings, published in "The Law That Never Was," make a convincing case that the 16th amendment was not legally ratified."

Or even just a blue diamond emoji, which I think is an endorsement for Lucky Charms. So enjoy!

Namaste, y'all.

Sharp dressed hitman

Q&A. Simon Pegg suits up for "Kill Me Three Times."

When he's not starring in — and writing — "Star Trek" sequels or marveling at Tom Cruise's stunts in the "Mission: Impossible" films, Simon Pegg likes to relax and unwind in far-off locations like Perth, Australia, and put a few locals out of their misery. Or at least that's what he does as Charlie, a dapper contract killer in "Kill Me Three Times."

My favorite description of Australia is "the most beautiful place in the world that's always trying to kill you." Agree or disagree?
[Laughs] I didn't suffer any attacks when I was there, but yeah, there's quite a lot of deadly stuff there. We were aware that there has been a couple of fatal shark attacks on the coast where we were going to shoot a couple of surfing scenes, where Alice [Braga] and Luke [Hemsworth] were going in. So I was a little worried for them, but there was, thankfully, no assault on our lives.

Luke is the older brother of Chris and Liam Hemsworth. Exactly how many Hemsworths are there out there, and how do we stop them?
I don't know. I feel like they multiply, but I think Luke is probably the brood mother of them all. He spawned the other Hemsworths, and who knows how many there are? I don't know. Luke was very vague about the amount of Hemsworths there are in the world. [Laughs] No, Luke is super-cool. And it's sweet when he talks about his brothers. He's obviously very proud of them and protective of them, and he's clearly the biggest of the three — albeit the stockiest, not the tallest.

Simon Pegg rocks proper desert attire in the black comedy "Kill Me Three Times." / MAGNET RELEASING

How was it being one of the only non-Australian outsiders in this?
It was good. I mean, it felt kind of important to us that Charlie was a strange invader. He's a very incongruous figure in the film. He's incredibly conspicuous, and he doesn't really try not to be. He drives a f—ing huge car, and he wears a black suit and dresses like he thinks a hitman should dress. It's a fun thing to casually walk up a sand dune wearing a Paul Smith suit carrying a rifle. You don't get to do that in real life very often.

You're also rocking quite the handlebar mustache in this film. Very impressive.
It's a good one. It's perfect for the character. It's not entirely flattering, but it just felt right. It's a statement that Charlie makes about himself and his face.

WINTER IS BACK: 'GAME OF THRONES' RETURNS

"Thrones" on the web

WINTER IS COMING

As the editor-in-chief for Winter Is Coming, Dan Selcke spends his time writing about the latest "Game of Thrones" news and preparing for the long night that will have no end.

Read more of him at Winteriscoming.net.

At last, the fifth season of "Game of Thrones" is upon us. The opening episode, "The Wars to Come," finds the characters picking up the pieces after Season 4's finale. It looks like this season will be a bit slower and more contemplative than last year, but it'll still pack in plenty of the textured storytelling that has made the show a hit.

Episode MVPs

After killing his father and lover at the end of last season, Tyrion Lannister (Peter Dinklage) has gone into exile. The guy has hit rock bottom, and Dinklage has a great time scowling, drinking and snarking his way through his scenes. Dinklage has always been one of the show's best assets, and his take on the new, more dour Tyrion is already a highlight.

Meanwhile, at the Wall, Jon Snow (Kit Harington) is dealing with the arrival of Stannis Baratheon (Stephen Dillane) and his hangers-on. For the first time in a while, the Wall isn't in danger of attack, so there's room to just let these personalities bounce off each other.

Further east, Daenerys Targaryen (Emilia Clarke) is trying to manage local unrest in Meereen, her new base of operations. While past seasons had her marching from place to place, freeing slaves and siccing her dragons on the unwary, her new story looks like a slow burner.

Questions for next week

"The Wars to Come" was stuffed with story, but Arya Stark (Maisie Williams) sat it out. We'll have to wait to find out what happened to everyone's favorite revenge-bent moppet after she boarded that boat to Braavos.

It'll also be interesting to see whether Cersei Lannister (Lena Headey) can keep the Seven Kingdoms running smoothly now that her father is dead. She's got a short fuse and holds onto grudges like they're old friends, so smart money is on no.

Finally, I'm eager to see the show make good on this episode's promise that Tyrion will meet up with Daenerys. "Game of Thrones" often keeps its various plotlines on parallel tracks, so the prospect of two big ones crossing is very exciting.

Remakes

In other news

Those who still can't get enough "Game of Thrones" may be happy to hear there's an Indian remake coming called "Rani Mahal." Producers have already cast the Indian equivalents of Jon Snow, Cersei and Daenerys, and they hope to air the series later this year.

HOW TO GET AHEAD

How to identify a high-impact internship

The ideal internship is one where you can contribute meaningfully. ISTOCK

Don't waste your summers, find a great position instead.

MOLLY CONGDON
@MetroBos
letters@metro.us

Internships are not easy, especially if you end up spending most of your summer doing grunt work. That's why Eric Woodard — the author of "The Ultimate Guide to Internships: 100 Steps to Get a Great Internship and Thrive in It" — says students need to target what he calls "high-impact" positions to make sure they are on the path to success.

We asked Woodard for his tips for the best way to get a meaningful internship:

Create a career story

"You have to build career capital," Woodard says. "There's a difference between someone who has a résumé that's all over the place and someone who crafted a story. You want to find an internship that contributes to that story."

Mentorship

"Study after study shows that mentorship is key," Woodard says. "You're almost better off finding the not-so-great internship that's at Bob's Tackle Shop — not the shiniest — but if Bob is the best mentor in the world, that's better than doing an internship at a more impressive company."

Be Yourself

"If you are really genuine in your application, very good internship hosts are going to be attracted to that," Woodard says.

Be an attention grabber

"Get attention with your applications. You want to stand out," Woodard says. "If you do that, you'll find that the good internships are the ones that are going to notice that you're being remarkable."

Look for signs

"If you're applying to an internship, you look for the language they use, and if there's language that talks about how an internship is aimed at developing a student or they care about learning — that's a really good sign," Woodard says. "I can't tell you how many internships are out there that don't even mention that."

"For example, I ran into a situation recently where an applicant wrote us and said, 'Hey, there's an error on your website.' He's putting himself out there — that's brave. That's going to make your résumé a compass to point in the right direction and a magnet to really attract great internships."

Take risks

Don't do everything by the book. "Lots of internships out there are looking for a carbon copy. They take the same students in the same way," Woodard says.

"The way to attract good internships is to take risks."

Collect those contacts

"When I first started as an intern, one of the first things that someone gave me was one of those old Rolodexes, and I have three or four thousand contacts now — some of them I met 15 years ago," Woodard says. "Building those contacts from the beginning is really important when trying to find jobs."

Don't be a generalist

"A lot of students are afraid to be specific [on their cover letters or in interviews]," Woodard says. "Political Science or International Affairs is too broad. What you want to do is be the world's expert on Himalayan tectonics as it relates to Nepali women and girls on a Sunday in the rain — that's what makes them very employable."

LEARN THE WORTH OF YOUR WORK

Do your homework before meeting with the boss. ISTOCK

INSIDE HR
VICKI SALEMI
letters@metro.us

If you've been reluctant to broach salary with your boss, this is your time to shine!

That's because tomorrow is Equal Pay Day. Originating in 1996 as a public awareness event to showcase the gap between men's and women's wages, Tuesday was selected to represent how far into the new workweek women must work to earn the total that men earned by the end of the previous week. Sigh.

According to an American Association for University Women (AAUW) report, in 2013 American women earned 78 cents compared to a dollar earned by men for full-time workers.

Here are some ways to shrink the gap and ask for the bank you deserve:

Ask for more: Wayne Gretzky once said, "You miss 100 percent of the shots you don't take." What are the odds your boss will approach you and say, "Congratulations, there's extra money in the budget so I'm going to pour it all into your salary"? But what if you take the shots you previously missed by approaching your boss and showing your worth? Schedule a meeting and arrive prepared. Compile accolades you've received and a long list of accomplishments along with the ammo of your current pay and the going rate to state your case. Specifically ask for a percentage increase of your base compensation.

Be realistic: Keep expectations in check — salary review may not occur until the fall or even year's end, so the conversation may feel like a moot point if budgets don't get tapped. It still matters. Get onto your boss' radar screen that you want to earn more, you deserve it and your work, ethic and attitude speak for themselves.

Do some digging: Knowledge is power. Whether or not you reap pay equality in this job, information will bolster you with power as you pound the pavement for the next one. Conduct informational interviews with peers at other companies and attend industry events.

Ask your HR department: Some companies have transparent policies; others have closed doors. It doesn't hurt to ask. You don't need to say why you're asking, though it's pretty much assumed.

Feel entitled and deserving: Hopefully Equal Pay Day will get you thinking more about money and also feeling more entitled to get paid well for a job well done.

Letters to the editor

Harsh penalties while living, not death, for criminals like Tsarnaev

There should never be any death penalty, not even for Tsarnaev — it's too damn good! Instead all felons, not just killers, should become slaves to pay society back:

1) Work like dogs on chain gangs doing jobs we all both need and hate, like separating recyclables from garbage.

2) Give blood regularly to save lives — also half the liver, which grows back.

3) Be guinea pigs for all medical research, thus eliminating all animal testing (how's that, PETA?) and getting new medicines to market 10 years sooner;

4) Have their wills suspended or rescinded — if they die in prison, everything goes to victims first, the state second and all organs go to those who need them. If all this were law, imagine the deterrent effect! J. ANDREW SMITH, VIA EMAIL

Forgotten historical milestone

The Civil War ended on April 9, 1865. President Abraham Lincoln died on April 15. How disappointing that most media failed to report on the 150th anniversary of both. PBS missed a great opportunity to rerun Ken Burns excellent series on the Civil War. No wonder many have no sense of history for our great nation.

No Olympics

Polls show the majority of the population of the Greater Boston area do NOT want the Olympics hosted in Boston. In a functioning democracy this would be the end of the story, but we all know democracy takes a secondary position to what the corporate lords and the wealthy want. D. BROWN

Spieth ties Masters record

Jordan Spieth became the first wire-to-wire Masters winner in 39 years Sunday as he shot an 18-under 270 to capture his first green jacket. The 18-under score tied the best mark at Augusta ever. Phil Mickelson and Justin Rose couldn't keep pace with Spieth as both settled for a second place finish, going 14-under. Tiger Woods finished 5-under and in 17th place but the big news surrounding the former Masters champ Sunday was that he injured his wrist when he caught a tree root with an iron shot on the ninth hole Sunday.

Home sweet Fenway

MLB. The Red Sox are looking to hit the wall in left hard in 2015.

Mike Napoli and the Red Sox are back at Fenway today. / GETTY IMAGES

The Red Sox and their depleted pitching staff (by way of Friday's 19-inning game in New York) will make their way to Fenway Park for Monday's home opener against the Washington Nationals (3 p.m., NESN), a team predicted to be one of the best in the majors this season with their stacked starting rotation.

"Hopefully Opening Day has marked the end of the brutal winter," manager John Farrell wrote in a letter to Red Sox fans via the team website. "I hear the field is finally showing green grass. We're eager to get back to Boston to see our fans during this first home stand and throughout the 2015 season."

It will also mark the first appearances at Fenway for Rick Porcello (Monday's starter), Pablo Sandoval and Hanley Ramirez (since 2005) in Red Sox uniforms.

As a team, the Sox are hoping things go much better at Fenway than they did last year. Usually dominant at home, the Red Sox went just 34-47 on Yawkey Way in 2014 — part of their last-place finish in the AL East. As a comparison, in 2013 the team went 53-28.

A number of Red Sox players will welcome playing at Fenway Park, in particular because of the Green Monster in left field. Ramirez, Mookie Betts and Sandoval all hit balls that surely would have gone for doubles, or even homers, on the road trip, but went for long flyouts. Ramirez, in particular, will benefit from the wall just 307 feet away from home plate in left. He has the perfect swing for Fenway, and if he can stay healthy his career-high of 33 home runs all the way back in 2008 could certainly be attainable in matching.

The Fenway confines benefit another player in the Red Sox order, in Mike Napoli. In 149 games, he's a career .266 hitter with a .379 on-base percentage along with 24 homers and 84 RBIs at Fenway. Also, David Ortiz and Sandoval (from the left side) will be able to use the wall to their benefit when going the other way, slapping some wall-ball doubles.

As some have pegged the team to potentially score 900 runs this season, playing their home games at Fenway Park is a major reason why.

Last year's Fenway opener didn't go so well for the home team — falling 6-2 to the Brewers.

RYAN HANNABLE
@RyanHannable
sports@metro.us

By the numbers

Fenway Park is typically kind to the Red Sox but last year was an exception as they went just 34-47 at home. In the 2013 World Series championship season, the Sox went a sparkling 53-28 at Fenway. In 2012 they went 34-47 in Boston and in 2011 they went 45-36 at home.

NBA

Celtics may not be done with Cavs

The Celtics had a clean sweep of the Cleveland Cavaliers this past weekend. If Boston and the Cavs meet in the first round of the playoffs this coming weekend, there's little doubt that grabbing a single "W" won't be nearly as easy for the C's.

With the No. 2 seed in the East locked up, Cleveland rested LeBron James, Kyrie Irving, Kevin Love and J.R. Smith Sunday at TD Garden and the Celtics took full advantage, blasting the Cavs, 117-78.

The Celts outscored the Cavs, 34-9, in the second quarter Sunday as Isaiah Thomas (17 points), Evan Turner (15 points) and Avery Bradley (12 points) led the way offensively.

The Celtics also beat the Cavs in Cleveland last Friday, 99-90.

The C's are now 38-42 on the season with two regular-season games left to play — at home Tuesday against Toronto (7:30 p.m., CSNNE) and at Milwaukee Wednesday (8 p.m., CSNNE).

Boston held a full-game edge over the No. 8 seed, Brooklyn (37-43), as of Sunday afternoon. If the Celtics and Nets remain where they stood Sunday, the Celtics would face the Cavs in the first round and Brooklyn would face top-seeded Atlanta.

Tyler Zeller and the C's could see the Cavs again real soon. / GETTY IMAGES

A Cavs team at 100 percent is certainly not something the Celtics would like to see in the first round if they have any thoughts of playing into May. On March 3, Cleveland throttled a Celtics team that had been playing their best basketball of the season. The Cavs outscored the Celtics, 29-16, in the first quarter and 32-20 in the second quarter of that game, ultimately winning 110-79. LeBron James pumped in 27 points in the Cleveland romp.

The NBA playoffs begin this Saturday. MATT BURKE
